“Karla Raines did a amazing job at facilitating our board retreat. It was clear she had done a great deal of planning prior to the event as she was able to provide a structure and framework resulting in great progress through the day. I truly believe she is the best facilitator for that type of meeting that I have ever worked with.”

The Resource Exchange – “Building independence for people with developmental disabilities.”

"From their introductory and initial fact-finding meetings through present, Karla Raines, Corona Principal, and her team have been consistently professional, informative, and instructive. Their counsel and guidance has been tailored to our needs to such a degree as to reflect an intimate understanding of our culture and its needs. Written reports are timely and detailed. Changes in course are seamless and handled with aplomb. The process, which through our RFP was intended to be exhaustive, has matched our expectations perfectly. Corona has interacted with multiple components of our constituency, and feedback has been, without exception, superlatively positive."

The Denver Public Library – “Helping the people of our community achieve their full potential.”

“The Denver Public Library selected Corona Research to conduct a series of ten focus groups in 2005 as an initial step in gathering public input for the Library’s strategic plan. Corona’s proposal was selected due in a large part to their demonstrated strength in conducting focus groups with diverse participants, especially Spanish speakers. Corona’s ability to put together a team of highly qualified facilitators that reflected the diversity of our community resulted in a high level of engagement by the participants. Corona demonstrated flexibility, creative problem solving and professionalism in their interactions with the Library’s Executive Team, Denver Public Library Commissioners, participants and staff throughout the project. The final report by Corona is a testament to their thoroughness, attention for detail and ability to provide clear, direct findings to a wide spectrum of readers.”

Ft. Collins, CO – Voted as the best place to live in the country by Money Magazine

“Corona Research successfully completed project work for the City of Fort Collins, Colorado. Specifically, the project consisted of a highly complex study of the potential impact of the enforcement of a local ordinance limiting occupancy in residential dwellings. Additional challenging factors included the fact that the ordinance was very controversial and thus contested by stakeholders on multiple sides of the issue, and the timeframe to complete the study was limited. Under these circumstances, Corona Research performed a high quality, objective and unbiased study that was highly regarded by the City of Fort Collins...”

Adams County in Colorado – A County On The Move

“Corona's work on the 2004 Adams County Needs Assessment has been superlative. The Adams County Office of Community Development put together a fairly ambitious and complex Scope of Work that combined survey research with community mobilization, asset mapping, gaps analysis and other activities any of which alone would have been a major undertaking. Corona quickly grasped the demands of the project, and held to a very tight production schedule. Corona positioned itself as a company that could "do it all", and they succeeded in meeting all of our technical expectations. They are very disciplined, on time, on budget and product oriented. Customer service and "after sales support" are very high. Communication with Corona was straightforward and to the point, at the same time flexible enough to accommodate the usual ambiguities and vagaries associated with such a project. Finally, Corona was an excellent partner in that they viewed our project as their own, and dedicated the necessary resources, staff, flexibility and energy in order to see it succeed. I can't recommend them highly enough.”

“We recently partnered with Corona Research to conduct Spanish-language focus group research in various markets. They were presented with a challenging, non-traditional, qualitative request and performed admirably, providing valuable insight and recommendations.”
